HER MAJESTY VICTORIA.

Victoria, beloved of the English nation and esteemed of the whole civilized world, was 74 years of age yesterday. She was born May 24, 1819, succeeded to the throne June 20, 1837, and was crowned queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland June 28, 1838. She has consequently ruled over one of the foremost nations of earth for the period of 56 years—years filled with joys, trials and splendors unequalled in the history of modern civilization.

From the day she raised the royal scepter she has honored England's name, and has in return been honored by all nations. The strongest and most enduring testimony of her worthiness and nobility is the fact that she has been, without a single deviation or exception during her long reign, a conscientious and constitutional ruler.

Respecting the laws, she has been made the idol of that great, liberty-loving people, the English nation. Her reign marks a mighty stride forward by the dominating force of European civilization, which is culminating in the world-establishment of civil and political liberty. The influences of the Victorian epoch are as far-reaching as the earth. England's law and statecraft have been prime factors in directing the westward course of the empire, and in establishing the frontiers of modern civilization.

At present the wise men of Europe are eagerly watching the partition of the western hemisphere under the ameliorating political policy dominated, if not dictated, by the two great nations of today, who are pushing Anglo-Saxon civilization to the world's land limits.

The civilization of the new west is rapidly atoning for the failures of the old east. Forms of government have in a great measure been substituted by the spirit and will of the people governed. This fact is true of both England and America, and the chief factor of the advancement and development of these great nations has been the recognition of this principle by their national leaders. Victoria, queen of England, as one of these, calls forth the commendation and endorsement of the lovers of civil liberty of all nations—may God preserve her to the world yet a little longer.

DISHONEST JOURNALISM.

The Bulletin, either by violating confidence or some more disreputable means, published yesterday part of a statement of facts relating to the late overthrow of the monarchy, prepared by ex-Minister Stevens for the American press. The fact that the document, even in its garbled form, is the best thing the Bulletin has published for many months, does not in any way excuse its act.

There is a point in journalism where enterprise ceases and dishonor begins. The facts connected with the purpose and origin of the document in question precludes the plea that the Bulletin secured the portion of Mr. Stevens' statement published by either honest or honorable means. It is perhaps unnecessary to add that the situation occupied by the royalist organ would be humiliating to any other journal and party except those implicated.

The facts regarding the document mentioned are briefly these: More than a month ago Mr. Stevens had the article, as published in the Bulletin, put in type at the HAWAIIAN GAZETTE office. His reasons for having it published here in the form of slips was to avoid the fatigue and misstatements peculiar to press interviews after his arrival in the United States. It was Mr. Stevens' special request that the strictest business confidence should be observed in the matter so that the document would not be published here until after it had returned through the American newspapers. It is needless, perhaps, to state that this confidence would not have been violated by any respectable journal here or elsewhere. Had the ex-queen published a similar document in the GAZETTE office the same inviolable confidence would have been observed.

Since, however, the leading royalist newspaper in Honolulu has so far forgotten the principles of honorable journalism, it becomes an act of justice to ex-Minister Stevens to publish the entire text of his statement, as amended by him. This we publish elsewhere, although it is but fair to state that the document may receive further amendment at Mr. Stevens' hands before he uses it in the United States.

The force of Mr. Stevens' statements has evidently been felt already by the Bulletin, as the only answer attempted is a renewal of the low-toned personal attack on the ex-minister originally begun in that paper. The public will not be surprised at the course pursued by the Bulletin in thus wantonly abusing an absent man, who has given no special provocation beyond preparing and reserving a statement concerning his official acts here, to be laid before his countrymen, if occasion demands, upon his advent in the United States.

Mr. Stevens has not in any manner overstepped the limits of a moderate personal propriety. The Bulletin, on the other hand, has as usual degraded itself and its cause by exploiting royalist political tactics of the Nordhoff stripe.

They Smoke Good Cigars.

It may not be generally known that the naval officers in Uncle Sam's new cruisers smoke four cent cigars, and pure Havana at that. These cigars are not exactly smuggled, but they pay no duty and come into port under the protection of the stars and stripes and Uncle Sam's big guns. Customs officers don't bother the cruisers, and the officers of the navy enjoy good cigars at native Cuban prices. One of the big white cruisers on her last return from the West Indies brought in a supply of 500,000 pure Havanas, and the officers of other vessels are now smoking them free from care or duty.—[Am. ## THE AUSTRALIA SAILS.

A LARGER CROWD THAN USUAL AT THE WHARF.

The Big Steamer is Sent on Her Way With Music, Leds and Good Wishes.

The departure of the Australia yesterday morning was attended with more than usual interest, partly on account of the large number of our citizens who were voyaging with her, and partly because ex-Minister Stevens was on board and many people who were not present at the demonstration last night desired to bid him a last God-speed. But Mr. Stevens and family had gone on board early, and did not show themselves on deck until the vessel had left, and the vast crowd which filled the great sheds of the Oceanic Steamship Company, except those who were intimate enough with him to bid him farewell in his private cabin, were disappointed in waving their last adieu to one whose love for Hawaii has been second only to that for his native country.

The departure of the vessel was enlivened by the inspiring strains of the Hawaiian band. The vessel was crowded from stem to stern with the outgoing passengers and numerous friends who had congregated to bid them a last farewell, cover them with leis and load them down with baskets of tropical fruit and flowers, as a last token of regard. The ladies as usual obstructed the passage way to and from the gangplank by making it the scene of their last farewells, as ladies always have done and will do on steamers all over the world. Others were rushing frantically about inquiring for baggage which had been safely landed in the hold hours before, while their escorts were inwardly wishing they were fairly out at sea and settled down to whist and other routine amusements of an ocean voyage.

But it is the same old story, it happens on the sailing of any steamer from any port, to a greater or less extent, but never to such an one as in Hawaii, which is becoming noted everywhere for its love of music, flowers, and exuberant hospitality, and at no time is this shown more than on the departure of a steamer. No passenger on an outgoing vessel can ever forget the last sight of Honolulu and none leave it without pleasant recollections; so pleasant, indeed, that the recollection often becomes father to the wish to return, which ultimately becomes a realization. At exactly 12:40 p. m. the good ship cast off her shore lines and backed out into the stream and was soon lost to sight, and the last opportunity of communicating with the outside world for many days had gone from those left behind.

May 22d, 1893.

There seems to be a growing desire on the part of a majority of the people on these islands to buy goods from us, and our desire to sell them grows also. Last week, we had to employ extra men to assist us in handling an unusually large volume of business; the "Australia," "Amy Turner" and "S. N. Castle" having arrived during the week with enough goods for us to stock any ordinary store. People who have entertained the idea that "business" has been out in the mountains gathering ohelo berries during the past few months will discover their mistake if they will come into our store any day; we have been "hard at it" all the time.

On the "Castle" we had a new lot of Fischer Steel Ranges of a much superior quality than any we have had before; the steel is of double thickness, and all parts are finished in the best manner. It is acknowledged by cooks to be the best range made, on account of their quick heating, economy of fuel and superior baking qualities. We sold twelve of them between Wednesday and Saturday last; we will sell double the number during the present week.

The demand for the Hendry Breaker does not diminish; every few day we get orders from managers of plantations who want to simplify their work and get the largest service with the least supply of mule force. It is pretty generally understood now a days that the Hendry Breaker is the only plow that fills the requirements. Where six and eight mules were formerly used in plowing four and six now do the work and gambol over the green sward at the end of the day like delegates to a democratic convention. As humanitarians we are pleased to think we have done something that brings joy to the heart of a mule.

We can fill orders at all times for 12, 14 or 16 inch breakers.
